Making informed decisions in the current tax environment

You've worked really hard to achieve your level of financial success. So naturally, it's important to understand the potential impact of estate taxes on you and your estate. And, you want to make sure the assets you've accumulated go to those you want to benefit, in the manner you desire. That's what estate planning helps you do.

Understanding the effects of estate taxes

Depending on the size of your estate, it may be subject to federal estate taxes. As your estate grows, so does your potential tax liability, leaving less for your loved ones or a favorite charity. But by planning ahead, you can minimize the impact the tax has on those you leave behind.

More than ever, with uncertainty as to the future of the Federal Estate tax, the impact to your estate may be different throughout the next several years.

What are the potential impacts?

As it stands today, provisions of the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act allow for a large estate tax exemption of $13,610,000 (per person) and $27,220,000 (per married couple).¹ However, those provisions are temporary and scheduled to sunset, or revert, to an estimated $6,805,000 (per person) and $13,610,000 (per married couple) in 2026.¹

Estimated federal estate tax exemption

¹ The exemptions are subject to indexing.

Let's get started.

No one has a crystal ball to know what the future holds. But, it all starts with getting a better idea of what your estate value could be in the future. So this report projects what your estate tax liability could be.

Using where you are today, the graph below provides an estimate of your estate tax exposure, using two different assumed growth rates.² The results give you a range of potential outcomes that can help you make more informed decisions.

Estimated federal estate tax exposure

² Higher investment returns typically involve greater investment risk.

Here's how we calculated the results

- Estate tax exemption indexed at 2% based on Chained Consumer Price Index (C-CPI).
- Estate tax rate is 40%.
- Unspent, after-tax annual income is not reinvested.

Some other things you might want to consider

- State estate or inheritance taxes could be an additional factor in your planning, based on the current higher exemptions.
- Estate taxes could also be impacted by family changes such as divorce or inheritance, debt reduction, unspent income and planning strategies used to reduce estate taxes.

Life insurance can help you meet your goals.

Now that you've reviewed estimates of your potential future estate tax exposure, it's time to consider how you can lessen the financial impact to those you leave behind. Life insurance can help prevent the sale of an important family asset such as land, a vacation home, or family business by paying death benefit proceeds that can be used to cover federal and state estate or inheritance tax bills or provide extra estate liquidity for legacy planning, so long as you pay a certain premium amount.

Those who use life insurance for estate planning have various options including term and permanent life insurance.

Term life insurance

With term coverage, you implement life insurance protection for a certain amount of time, generally from 10 to 30 years. When the term is up, you may be able to renew your policy (at a new higher rate based on your current age) or let it end. Key benefits of term insurance are its lower initial cost and the potential opportunity to convert it to permanent insurance later without the need for additional underwriting even if your health has changed.

Permanent life insurance

This type of insurance provides coverage that can last your entire lifetime. Some policies offer a cash value component that can accumulate cash savings over time. People often purchase permanent insurance for its coverage they can't outlive and to lock-in rates at their current age that would otherwise increase as they age.

Your financial professional will help find a solution that may be appropriate for you. Here is what you will discuss:

- Your health
- The amount of coverage you need, and its cost.

An industry leader in your corner

Your legacy is important. Creating your estate plan today can give you the confidence and control to know that it will be passed on to your loved ones the way you intend. Equally important is the company you choose to work with to help ensure the plan design meets your goals.
