

How prepared are you to exit your business?

You have a lot to consider when planning to successfully transition out of your business—like preparing a plan, determining a value for the business, and how you'll fund your plan. It's also important to consider: Is your business your retirement? Are you and your business ready for what comes next? How does your progress stack up to that of other business owners? We asked a group of owners recently about their plans¹, and though some have plans in place, many still don't.

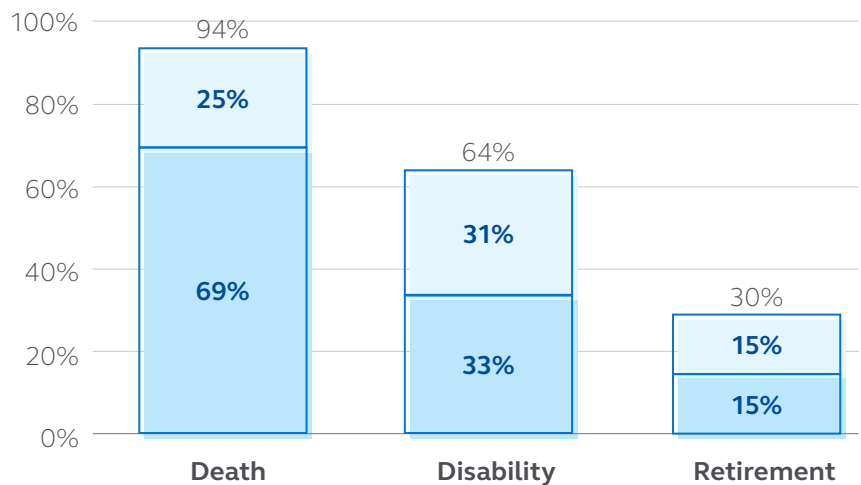

Top transition events

Most buy-sell agreements account for transitioning at death but leave disability and retirement often overlooked. Planning for these events will help ensure successful transition of your business.

Have you started thinking about retirement?

Today, you may think you're going to work forever. But as the years go by, your plans might change.

Only 13% of business owners don't plan to retire. For the rest, a record 62% say retirement is 11 or more years away. Knowing how your business fits into your retirement is a good reason to ensure you have proper planning in place.

If you're within 10-20 years of retirement

Now's the time to determine the value of your business so that it can eventually help to fund your retirement. Here are some of the steps other business owners have taken to start the planning process:

Create a business succession plan

60% of owners have a business succession plan.

Of those who have a plan, 90% are either somewhat or very confident about their exit strategy. Their reasons for being confident include knowing they have a good plan, a strong business, and family will take over.

Periodically review your plan

Of the owners with plans, 26% haven't reviewed their plan in over two years.

The most popular succession strategy is gifting the business to family members. Thirty-two percent of owners said this was their plan. If family succession is your plan, do you know how you'll replace your income without a buyout for the business?
